TU-UAY'S YALE-PHINGEIUN

Both Teams Are in Prime Condition and Will Play the Best Game That Is in Them.

BY HARRY BEECHER.

ALE and Princeton, the two bulldogs of the gridiren, meet for a championship tussle on the Yale field this afternoon. Both teams are fit and ready, and both expect to win.

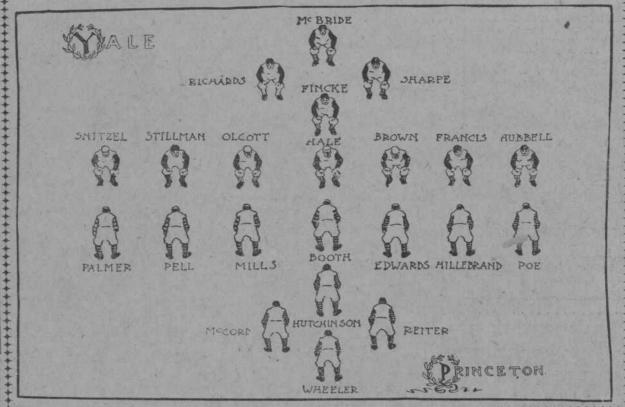

Princeton has always been a loyal supporter of straight football. She throws aside all frills and fancy business, and faces the cold proposition of advancing the ball five yards, no matter what the defence may be.

Her two mainstays in to-day's battle will be the tandem play on tackles and fierce line plunges by her snappy half backs.

Yale remembers the tandem play, much to her sorrow, and has been brushing up a defence for it during the last week. There is only one way to stop a line plunge, and that is to break through and stagger it, the other man getting the runner. There is no chance to get it sideways, and to wait for it in the line means certain loss. Nassau may throw in a trick or two, just for seasoning, but will rely mainly on these two plays.

If Yale can stop these battering rams she will finish Princeton's aggression, with the exception of kicking. McBride ought to be able to outpunt Wheeler on form, but the ends' inability to hold may equalize matters.

Whether the blue legs can smother Princeton's defence is a serious question. She has not a brilliant aggression, while defence is Nassau's strongest point. Yale, no doubt, will force the game, if possible, into a kicking contest, and if she can do it she has a good chance to win. She cannot afford, however, to make the muffs she did at Cambridge. Give the Tigers the ball near Yale's goal line and the chances are good for a Princeton score. They are like hounds who see the fox-they no longer have to follow the scent.

The game, in my judgment, will be decided by a fumble or by better field generalship. Yale will pick out Princeton's supposed weakness and hammer it until it becomes too sore to last. Princeton, no doubt, will do the same. The general, therefore, whose judgment is correct will pull down the coveted prize.

A kicking game is an absolute block to large scores; and as I expect to see plenty of punting in to-day's game, the score should be small, not more than six points either way. When the ball is in the air twenty out of thirty-five minutes there is not much time for touchdowns. If both teams stick to a correct policy and do not let loose the running game, unless on the enemy's twenty-five-yard line, there should be a score. It is the persistent jamming of the team at the centre of the field, where there is no chance of scoring, that takes away vitality. Then, when the moment does come, there is not go enough left to take the ball over the line. There have been games lost that way-one of them just a week ago-but Yale and Princeton know too much to indulge in this iring-out method.

With a fair day it should be the most interesting struggle of the year. There is no give up to either team.

KNOWING BETTORS

Ridden by O'Connor, She Won Easily at Bennings.

Washington, Nov. 24.-Two odds on favor-Ites, a second choice and two outsiders scored to-day, the sequel of which was a hard day for the majority of the bettors. The successful long shots had little claim to consideration on any form they had shown, and as a consequence the few that backed them were of the sort that go shooting at the moon.

Althea alone was the salvation of the knowing crowd, and as O'Connor was up it goes without saying that his following was stanch and true, in fact the rule with the majority of the local bettors is to back everything he zides.

If McBride is so much . better than Wheeler, his punting will be modified by the sharp tackling of the light weights. I expect to see Princeton score once by straight football and once on a fumble by the Yale back field."
